piece of his right arm missing, and Mrs. O'Hara suffers from a gash in the left hand.

The family had just arisen from the evening meal, and the Lieutenant had started for the station when Mrs. O'Hara heard the cries of Johnny in the rear of the house. She ran to the window and saw her boy prostrate on the ground, with Tiger astride on the ground, with Tiger astride on the body and biting viciously at the head of the boy. She sprang out of the rear door and to the side of the boy. Tiger was still biting away at the head of the now unconscious infant, and the back of his head had been almost depleted of hair and flesh.

She tried to beat the dog off, and in turn was set upon by the brute. She was bitten on the hand, and again the dog returned to the boy. This time, he went at the cnild's arm and lacerated it in a frightful fashion, tearing away the flesh in huge chunks. Owen, the elder son, came to the rescue, and, finding the jaws of the dog set firmly into the skull of his brother, was forced to drag by main force the imbedded teeth of the animal one of Johnny's head. He too, was bitten, and then Michael Kennedy russhed up and beat the dog off with a club.

Tiger was chased into the kitchen and there fourteen shots were fired into his body by Kennedy and Lieut. O'Hara, who had been cailed back. The child Johanny was mangled in an awful manner, his skull being broken and necessitating the transplanting of bone and the use of over seventy-five silken stitches. The others are badly bitten, but will soon recover should hydrophobia not set in, it being feared that the animal was rabid.

Link at first denied all knowledge of the money, but afterwards confessed, and by his aid the detectives arrested the other five men.

Link tout the detectives that after all the passengers had left the cars he entered to get the lamps. He saw a package lying on the seat and took it into the house where the lamps are kept.

As soon as the other five men, who were in the house at the time, saw that the package contained money, a scramble occurred, each man grabbing what he could. In the general grab Link managed to hold on to the greater part of the money. When he was arrested he had 552, which he had secreted in his trunk.

Taylor had $140, and for safe keeping his wife kept it in her stocking. White had $225. He rolled it up in a wad and placed it under the carpet in his sleeping room. Hogan got $80, and gave it to his brother pending developments. Buckley's share was $42, and he intrusted it to a Newtown saloon-keeper.

Christ, who seemed to have got what was left, received only $12.50. Nothwithstanding this small amount, his wife guarded it just as jealously. She put it at the bottom of a jar full of beans which stood in the kitchen closet. The detectives recovered all the money but about $125.
